The diagram consists of 16 rows, each labeled with a number from 1 to 16 on the left. Each row contains two horizontal bars: a red bar on the left and a blue bar on the right. The bars are connected by a series of horizontal lines at the top and bottom, and a vertical line separates the red and blue bars. The bars are of varying lengths, and the overall structure is symmetrical.
